

what were their fears?

"One of my biggest fears before coming onto staff was the thought of raising financial support. But I went through staff training and they had wonderful classes that taught me the best ways to raise support. I also figured that if God was calling me to the field that He would provide the needed support."

Mark Kramer

"My biggest fear was what my family would think. Being raised in an Asian family they put a lot of emphasis on doing good for the family, getting a good job, and marrying the right girl and being involved as a missionary would take away from that. But God answered my prayers and my family supports and understands me."

Dan Lum

"My biggest fear was the job transitioning time. I thought that as soon as I wanted to join staff, I had to quit my job then "seek God's will" and raise support. But Campus Crusade had a great program for transitioning jobs where you can work corporately and in ministry simultaneously for awhile till you get your feet on the ground."

Susan Bultman

"My biggest fear was tackling the support issue. But Campus Crusade really trained me and showed me that I could do it. God is committed to my best interests and He withholds no good thing from me. That is a promise I can cling to."

Judy Nelson

"I had always been a little shy and I had a fear about meeting new people and sharing Christ with them. God addressed that issue through training that I received at Campus Crusade. The training made me more confident and gave me the words to say. Also, I found that there are many ways to share Christ with people, through conversations and Bible studies. One of the things that I really enjoy doing is leading Bible studies that get people involved with knowing the scriptures and teaching them that God can speak to them through scripture."
